We aimed to determine whether spermatozoa membranes contain hemichannels and explore their functional properties. We examined membrane permeability and electrophysiological characteristics of human spermatozoa by using the whole-cell patch clamp technique. Non-permeant substances such as sugars entered the cytoplasmic space and the luminal space through hemichannels in human spermatozoa. The calculated hemichannel conductance was 3.4 nS. We found hemichannel-like activity when the pH of luminal fluid decreased by 0.1 pH unit. The calculated P4 in extracellular/intracellular pH was 0.48. These results suggest that human spermatozoa contain hemichannels.[Association between the occurrence of lymphoid follicular and gastric antral erosions in patients with Helicobacter pylori infection]. Previous studies have demonstrated the relationship between peptic ulcer and the presence of Helicobacter pylori. The aim of the study was to evaluate the correlation between the presence of Helicobacter pylori and the occurrence of lymphoid follicular and gastric antral erosions in patients with atrophic gastritis and duodenal ulcer. The endoscopic study was performed in 128 patients (age range 38-81 years) with duodenal ulcer and atrophic gastritis. The endoscopic findings were compared with the histological and microbiological findings. Atrophic gastritis was diagnosed in 76 patients, gastric antral erosions in 34, lymphoid follicular erosions in 43 and duodenal ulcer in 43. H. pylori was cultured in 22 patients and in 25 a positive serology was obtained. In the study group the presence of gastric antral erosions was correlated with older age, the absence of Helicobacter pylori in culture or the presence
