Code: List = [#document{id:1,...},#document{id:2},#document{id:3},#document{id:4},#document{id:5}] Expected output is 2nd entry. It seems that the following is the only way to get it: [#document{id:2} |_] = List Am I missing something? Is there a better way of doing this? A: list:take(2) will return the first two items in a list. Or use the unordered key/value pairs: [{id, 2}, {id, 3}, {id, 4}, {id, 5}] The lac X open reading frame of Escherichia coli contains E. coli homologues of the 50S ribosomal protein L11. In the present study, the nucleotide sequence of the lac X gene of E. coli was determined and its DNA structure was deduced. An open reading frame (ORF) was found in the lac X gene by the comparative analysis of its derived amino acid sequence with that of other known proteins. This ORF encodes a polypeptide with a molecular weight of about 16.9 kDa, and contains no repeated sequence. The predicted amino acid sequence of this ORF was highly homologous to the E. coli 50S ribosomal protein L11. Southern blot hybridization analyses using lac X as a hybridization probe showed that the lac X gene is located close to the dnaA gene, which encodes a DNA replication initiation protein.15 August 2017, 15:35 Andalusia Province is a key destination for both new and returned tourists from all over the world.
