In the fantasy world, the Elder Lands are at war. Protecting this world is the fate of the Elden, a race of legendary warriors sworn to give their lives for their country. The grim reality for the Elden is that it is impossible to live up to their duty, which means it is essential that they choose a life of training. By performing their duties, the Elden secure a place in the country where they live. However, the Elden live in a deep darkness. They live with the curse of the Dark Elden, and their race is on the verge of extinction. In order to keep their race alive, the Elden must partner with their brethren, the Heralds of Eld, and gather the remaining children of the Dark Elden. Together with the Elden who travel the world, the Elden recruit the children of the Dark Elden from different races and species and train them to become useful Heralds. The women of the Elden are tasked with leading the training of the children. However, the Elden are not the only ones to receive the children of the Dark Elden. There are enemies who will stop at nothing to obtain the remaining children of the Dark Elden, even if it means destroying their own country. The war continues in this fantasy world, and the Elden must do all they can in order to protect this world. What's new in Elden Ring:

In late November 2012, Video Games Network announced the listing of Mercury's Cross in the U.S. That's great news for fans of Zombie Dragon. After a number of delays, the PDA has been passed in the state of Washington, which has given the handheld commercial device the green light.

The device has a 2 megapixel camera and 6 GB of internal memory. It has WiFi capabilities and a slide out QWERTY keyboard.

"After receiving numerous manufacturers' prototypes, we spent six months meeting with scholars and academics, investigating and analyzing gameplay mechanics, technological innovations, commercial feasibility, and gamer preference," said Zombie Dragon Studios owner, George Rowles.

Gameplay with Mercury's Cross will be similar to either Heavy Rain or Dark Planet, which are both awards-worthy smartphone games. The monsters on screen will be controlled by the user's left hand. Ten different levels are unlocked from the start for the player to explore.

At least two full games are promised before the year is up. "We are targeting Apple's App Store, Google's Android Market, and the Windows Phone Marketplace in 2013," said Rowles. "We are engaged in attempts to obtain distribution but it has been difficult."

Most gamers' heads have nodded approvingly at the prospect of
