Thoughts on the NBA and the world of sports, and the random side effects of getting older. Monday, June 10, 2012 Suns and Kings The news just keeps getting worse for the L.A. (Suns) and Sacramento (Kings) franchises. Without getting too into detail, here are the Kings fans who have blown me off the way, Eric Gordon's season-ending injury and Kevin Martin's trade to Houston. In the process of scouring the Kings team news, I came across this... "According to ESPN's Marc Stein, the Nets will not pursue Carmelo Anthony until free agency. The Nets have one year left on their current contract with Anthony and Charlotte and they cannot afford to spend money on a player they feel they can have for just one season. "It's important that Anthony choose the team he wants to be with for the long term. If he doesn't choose the Nets, or at least a team that is willing to work for him for the long term, the Nets will not be pursuing him." If their reported 'effort' to sign Melo is true, it's yet another sign that the old Nets are that much more yesterday than the new team. With all due respect to Mike Barnacle, that asinine selection of Melo over Ben Wallace is the reason the Nets are in the situation they're in now. Yes, their ownership still has the right to approve any trade, b7e8fdf5c8
