Bones, mammae and the origin of novel genes: the exon 7A of the essential bone morphogenetic protein receptor Alk2 and the RANK ligand. Both bone morphogenetic protein (BMP) and RANK ligand (RANKL) can be processed by TNFalpha converting enzyme to potent osteoclastogenic molecules. BMP and RANKL are close relatives with sequence conservation in the respective receptor-binding regions. The C-terminus of BMP2, the corresponding BMP2/4 segment, is one of the most divergent regions of the BMP family. An alternative splicing exon, exon 7A, is only present in the BMP2/4 segment of the extracellular domain of the essential BMP receptor, Alk2. Exon 7A is a 20 base-pair exon with in-frame deletion of six amino acids at the C-terminus of the Alk2 protein. Unlike other alternative exons, exon 7A is found in all human Alk2 transcripts. We show that in transfected cells exon 7A is localized on the plasma membrane. Northern blot analysis and reverse transcriptase-polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) showed that this exon is present in both the epidermis and the cartilage of mouse embryos. In human tissues, exon 7A is expressed predominantly in the epidermis and in the bone. Sequence analysis of the genomic structure of the Alk2 gene revealed that exon 7A is flanked by two Alu repeats located on the 3' side of exon 7A. This position correlates well with the frequency of Alu elements in the human genome. In mouse embryonic stem cells, the Alk2 transcript from which exon 7A has been removed is translated to a fusion protein with the cytoplasmic domain of a truncated form of a receptor protein. In addition, a lysosomal membrane protein, a secreted protein homologous to the extracellular domain of the receptor, and a putative transmembrane protein were identified in a cDNA library prepared from exon 7A-deleted Alk2-expressing cells, suggesting that exon 7A is part of a conserved novel gene family.
