conflict, cant locate com port with new updates in win 8.1. i have read over and over there must be something wrong with the firmware or the microcontroller in the printer. the other thing is is when you plug it in why does it not show up in the printer control. when you go to set it up in the control panel it shows up as a device then it takes two or three days to install properly. it wont do anything but hover over it and a beep beep beep is the only thing i hear. tack this off your list. why don't they just release an update that will work with win 8. please take a look at my question: winw, i have problem using top win manager software. i already tried reinstalling printer driver, but still cannot able to print a test page and the following error message: the printer is a multidrop inkjet printhead that cannot be disabled. every time i open the program, it will open up a popup that shows the following information about the printhead: the problem starts when i installed the add-on software from the printer package. when i ran the program, the error message shown above. when i use the original printhead driver it will print ok, but no adjustment to the printhead is available. i dont have the original driver. can anyone help me to solve this problem? thanks it could be that the drive isn't recognized properly because the driver isn't installed on your computer. in order to fix this problem, check out the following things: make sure the card reader is plugged in properly. close and reopen the card reader. if the card reader is still not recognized, try to update the card reader's driver. it is recommended to update the driver to the latest version that is available in the microsoft update web site. to update the driver, click start, click control panel, click system and maintenance, and then click windows update . open the appropriate notification, and then follow the onscreen instructions. note: for windows vista, system administrators can remove the status bar above the update list to make more space for displaying the list of updates. 5ec8ef588b
